AIRPORT SECURITY SAYS NO TO LIQUIDS

A new European Union law relating to air flight security will come into effect on Monday 7th of November.

This new law will make it illegal for passengers to carry in their hand luggage any type of liquid, including creams, pastes, lotions, syrups, perfumes, shaving foam, gels, and aerosols unless they are in containers of less than 100 millilitres. All liquid type products contained in packages of less than 100 millilitres must be placed in clear plastic bags and have a maximum capacity of 1 litre.

Laptops, electrical items, coats and jackets will have to pass through X-ray machines separately from other hand luggage items. Exceptions to this new rule will include liquid medication as long as it is accompanied by a doctor's note, and children's food, as long as it will be used during the flight.

Once passengers have passed through airport security they will be allowed to board the planes with liquids that have been bought from shops within airport departure lounges. Passengers wishing to take products such as perfumes, gels and shaving foam must pack these items in their luggage, which must be checked in prior to the flight.

Jumilla

IMPORTANT ARCHAEOLOGICAL DIG NEAR JUMILLA BEGINS THANKS TO FOUNDATION'S MONEY

One of the most important archaeological excavations on the Iberian Peninsula has begun on a 2,500-year-old site near Jumilla in Murcia.

Sponsored to the tune of €100,000 by a non-profit making organisation, "Fundación Adendia", Coimbra del Barranco Ancho is part of the initiative undertaken by the "Proyecto Iberos Murcia".

It is located in the northern spur of the Sierra de Santa Ana mountain range, about five kilometres from Jumilla town centre. The background to this settlement dates back to the period from the last years of the fifth century B.C. to the first years of the second century, until the onset of the Roman troops' arrival to the inhabited areas, which were destroyed and their populations dispersed.

The dig is led by José Miguel García Cano, Director of the "Museo de la Universidad de Murcia". In its first phase it will focus on the necropolis of the site, which holds the ancient tombs. These works began in October and are expected to finish in November. José Miguel García

Cano has in fact led the archaeological works in Coimbra del Barranco Ancho since the eighties and has in more recent years been accompanied by Emiliano Hernández, Director of the "Museo Arqueológico de Jumilla", and Virginia Page, Director of the "Museo de Arte Ibérico del Cigaralero".

Besides the work that is being carried out on the necropolis the team from "Proyectos Iberos Murcia" has also been cleaning various structures of the "poblado" or settlement. They wish to restart excavation and restoration work on the poblado in the future.

Without the "Fundación Adendia" money in this first phase of the project the archaeological dig would be dramatically delayed. The foundation wants to encourage historical investigation into our past through excavation and conservation and to stimulate knowledge and understanding of the heritage of Jumilla as well as the region of Murcia.
